MOV, .MPG, .AVI, .MPEG, .FLV, .WMV and .MP4 formats with quality and various settings. Plus, you can easily customize all settings with all available parameters, such as bit rate, resolution, audio quality, video codec, frame rate and many other parameters. With Video Converter Ultimate, you can convert both .MOV, .AVI, and .MP4 files and split one big video file into multiple smaller video files at the same time. It lets you choose any profile to speed up the conversion process.

Q: How do I add items to a window's non-modal dialog? How do I add items to a window's non-modal dialog (with the Edit.ShowDialog() method)? When the item is added, how do I keep it (the selection and added items)? A previous question I asked was: How do I use multi-select in a non-modal dialog? This one specifically asks for non-modal dialog. Update: This question was previously tagged as VB.NET, but I'm not using VB.NET, so I've changed the tags to C#. A: First of all, it is called an EditDialog, not a non-modal dialog. It is kind of a way of creating an ordinary form (typically with a OK button) that behaves like a modal dialog. You can use it just like any other form, and you can add controls to it. Here is a simple example: EDITOR.ShowDialog(Me); An EditDialog is created using the ShowDialog method, and you can add whatever you want to it. But when you are done editing, you have to call the Close method, which will close the dialog. It sounds like you might also want to go to the list, and add items to the list. You can do that like this: MyList.Items.Add("Hello World"); Then you can add a new item to the list like this: MyList.Items.Add("Hello There"); Remember that the list is in the same instance of the dialog. You can manipulate it, and it will affect the dialog. If you want the dialog to stay open while the user edits the list, you can use an Editor and Overwrite event like this: EDITOR.EditMode = 82157476af
